Library of Unwritten Books is a collection of possible books. Short interviews are recorded with people about a book they dream of writing or making. Limited edition mini books are published from transcripts of the interviews, which are made available to readers at exhibitions and special events. Touring book-boxes also display the books at everyday venues such as cafés, pubs, libraries and launderettes.

"Ars Poetica" by Zenon Fajfer has an innovative, "emanational" structure in which initials of all the words form a hidden layer of text. Reading initials should be repeated until the whole text is reduced to a single word. The form was first used in Fajfer and Bazarnik's triple book Oka-leczenie. To see the text involve and evolve, watch it at the websites below. Fajfer also coined "liberature" to define a literary genre in which text and the material shape of the book complement one another to form an organic whole. He insists that liberature is not an artist's book.

Sarah Jacobs' Deciphering Human Chromosome 16 bookworks use text in a visual way to document the ethical, economic, political and philosophical polemics associated with mapping the human genome. 'We Report Here' is an ebook which contains links to about 250 websites collected in the months following publication in the journal Nature of "The sequence and analysis of duplication-rich human chromosome 16" (Vol. 432. December 2004). Its contents change over time as the websites change, migrate or disappear.

Artists' books published in 2008 by the Media and Design Academy, Genk, Belgium. These are fiction stories for adults realised simultaneously by the word and image authors. To understand the story one has to be aware of the interaction between the linguistic and the non-linguistic marks. Not only the words, not only the images - the interaction between words and images tells the story:
