Somayeh Farzaneh - Book
Special Collections Room, Bower Ashton Library
2nd October – 2nd November 2009

It feels female to me, her being silent in such a profound and mature way, increases my special feeling towards her - being a teacher in a true sense at the right moment. My appreciation increased to the soul of ‘book’ as I became more sensitive to the world ... reading poems, looking at the blank paper, looking more closely at the paper itself ... sitting silently somewhere and she only starts talking to you at the moment that you are ready to listen to her, is her way. She keeps her silence as long as you do not know how to read it, an absolute inner silence. ‘Book’ has a strong role in my challenges with art - I can say that, after nature, books play the biggest role in my life. What I believe is that as an artist the first thing that needs to be learned is this: Learning how to be open to the entire being - inner and outer. I was reading poems from a book and I was enjoying turning the pages in a deep silence at night and I was wondering how to show my appreciation of this in my art works.

The first thing that amazed me about books was very simple: turn the pages and seeing how the world will change in the next page. At the same time it became my ambition to make the language of the book universal. I was thinking about making a book in such a way that everybody would be able to read it visually ... so it does not require a specific knowledge of a certain language in order to understand it.

Therefore I chose a book whose language I could not read myself, and then I worked on it upside down. In this way it would be difficult even for people who actually knew the language of the book to read the text.

My work began.

I made the colours myself, I coloured the paper and waited for the pages to dry, and then I began to do different things to the paper itself, I chose water as the base of my work because water flows as much as a poem would make my mind flow. Every page would change with my daily changes ... I could observe how much I was unable to control the effects ... Turning the pages in this particular book of mine is the main thing that I want to consider. Facing the unexpected space and emptiness created by colour and traces of burning upon the book itself.

Turning the page becomes meaningful in a visual sense, that was what I really enjoyed... sometimes I see a very cold landscape, sometimes a desert, sometimes a forest…

My approach to this book continued for a long time because it was rich enough to feed me for that long.

I have continued working on books and my view of artists’ books and their effect on me is changing and changing. Working on single sheets as pages is a very rich experience for me because in a loose book, I think, page turning has no function ... therefore I create two visual sides as simply as possible ... with less pages and more concentration.

I am currently looking for a supervisor for Doctoral studies, or Masters to concentrate on graduate study on impermanence. Please contact me via wu.wie1@gmail.com, if you have any recommendations for me. I would also like to exhibit more of my works.

Recycled library: Altered books
Artspace Mackay, QLD, Australia
Until 25th October 2009
Recycled library is an exhibition of works by Australian artists that incorporate existing/found books as a major conceptual and creative element. The exhibition investigates the symbolism of ‘the book’ in an era in which the printed page is in danger of being superseded by digital technology. In contemporary, predominantly literate, society the image of ‘the book’ has continued to be used as a powerful motif by visual artists but its meaning has become more diverse and ambiguous. Many of the artists in this exhibition have used second-hand books as a way of questioning the authority of the printed text, particularly as historical records of fact.

Cut It Out: Contemporary Paper Cut Artists
Southampton City Art Gallery
Until 18th October 2009
Cut It Out is an exhibition of established and emerging contemporary artists from the UK and Europe who are challenging the traditional boundaries of paper cut. They are exploiting the unique qualities of paper to make unexpected and unusual work, blurring the distinction between craft and visual art. Cut It Out seeks to explore artists currently working in this field, examining how their techniques and approaches are evolving paper cut into something uniquely modern. There are some site-specific installations and newly commissioned work especially for the exhibition.

5th International Artists’ Book Triennial Vilnius 2009
Theme - Text. Touring exhibition at
Art Centre Silkeborg Bad, Silkeborg, Denmark
12th September - 13th December
Organiser of the Exhibition: Circle Bokartas
Curator: Kestutis Vasiliunas

The exhibition will also tour in 2010 to Spring Gallery, Halmstad, Sweden; Seoul International Book Arts Fair, Korea, and to Venice.

330 artists from 56 different countries sent their books for the 5th International Artist’s Book Triennial Vilnius 2009. The jury selected 131 artists for the exhibition. The theme of the 5th International Artist’s Book Triennial is Text. The 5th Triennial displays the most interesting artists’ books from all over the world. It is the most wonderful experience to see culture, traditions of different countries, art schools reflected in the books created by the artists.

Paper typographic books and books printed by the use of classic graphic techniques - wood engraving, silk-screen printing or lithography; books printed by mixed techniques by combining possibilities of digital printing with drawing, collage and object; concept and handmade embroidered books; book objects, leperello and Fluxus books.

The key role here is played by the idea which materialises in multidimensional forms, and it is absolutely unimportant what means of expression were used in the book. Thus, whether they are “bibliophile” books or experimental or book objects - all of them by supplementing each other and contrasting with each other, help to reveal the miraculous and mysterious world of the artist’s book.

As always we have made a special conceptual catalogue in full colour. The catalogue has a modern design, is printed on good paper, and is bound by hand. The catalogue is in a numbered edition of 500, and available at 25 euro per copy on request.

RECENTLY ACQUIRED ARTISTS’ BOOKS AND OTHER WORKS
Athenaeum Music & Arts Library, La Jolla, CA, USA
Until 7th November 2009

The Athenaeum’s permanent art collection is ever-growing, with some exciting new additions especially in the Athenaeum’s Erika and Fred Torri Artists’ Books Collection. Until November 7, the Main and North Reading Room Galleries will feature works added to the collection over approximately the past two years.

The Athenaeum has recently completed some important collections: all artists’ books by Ed Ruscha from the 1960s and 70s and the complete collection by Allen Ruppersberg. Its Ida Applebroog collection is nearing completion.

Other new acquisitions have been concentrated in the areas of conceptual artists’ books - such as those by John Baldessari, Hans-Peter Feldmann, Allan Kaprow, Christian Boltanski, and Roni Horn - and on works by local artists including Joyce Cutler-Shaw, Judith Christensen, and Al Rodriguez. Also continuing to grow are collections of artists’ books from Scripps College Press, Gefn Press, Janus Press, and Granary Books.

Aside from artists’ books, works have been acquired from the Athenaeum’s exhibiting artists. Those added in the past two years include Jay Johnson, Faiya Fredman, Genie Shenk, Roman de Salvo, Althea Brimm, and many others.

There Goes My Hero
Curated by Erin Riley-Lopez
The Center for Book Arts, New York
Until December 5, 2009
There Goes My Hero explores a selection of contemporary women artists - Blanka Amezkua, Dara Birnbaum, Ali Fitzgerald, Chiara Ganesh, Aimée Lee, Dulce Pinzon, Wanda Raimundi-Ortiz, Trina Robbins, and Anne Timmons, among others - who use the format of comic books and/or the comic book superhero in their artistic practice as a strategy to comment on larger socio-political concerns.

As Curator Erin Riley-Lopez notes: “In recent years, there has been a resurgence in the interest in comics books and superheroes, most notably within the fields of fashion, art, and dance, among others, in the form of exhibitions, essays, and performances. There Goes My Hero traces the history of comics and superheroes and positions contemporary women artists within the dialogue of these genres to not only highlight what women artists in the field are doing, but also to question where the representation of these artists lies.”

Only a few of the artists use the original format of the comic book, while others transform it through a variety of mediums - drawing, embroidery, photography, and video. The artists are subverting the traditional notion of the comic book and the superhero and are re-imagining it for female audiences. The use of the superhero in their work is deliberate as the artists are, in a sense, elevating ordinary people to extraordinary heights. The characters/people in their work are given supernatural abilities, which are often meant to question culture at large.

A comprehensive catalogue accompany the exhibition.

Crime and Romance: Letterpress books and broadsides by Emily Martin
Abecedarian Gallery, Denver, USA
Until October 24th, 2009
Iowa artist Emily Martin uses a variety of printing methods with her books including inkjet printing, letterpress, Xerox, colour Xerox and offset. This is her first solo exhibition in the Denver area. At Abecedarian Martin is exhibiting work from an ongoing series begun in 1989. She made a series of 26 image prints and 20 word panels loosely exploring the notions of crime and romance. Some of the images were scenes of crimes and some were scenes of romance and some what she calls the innocent bystander images. Using the notion that adjacent word panels shade image meanings, Martin has combined the images in various presentations including prints and artists’ books.

In 2007 Martin began a similar process, working this time with a set of images and words as if she were casting a play. She came up with six separate figures, three pairs of figures and two different versions each of four different room settings and one crime scene body outline. This series is These characters and settings are layered on the prints in a variety of combinations and result in a series called Clues but no Answers.

Abecedarian Gallery has a permanent and ongoing focus on work that fits under the ‘book arts’ umbrella. Although main gallery exhibitions often include mixed-media work that connects somehow to an aspect of the book arts genre, sometimes that connection seems a tenuous one. In the Reading Room, books are always the main focus of the work on display.

Gallery Hours: Thursday, Friday, Saturday 1-5, 1st & 3rd Fridays 1-8. Due to the hands on aspect of book viewing, and the fragility of many of the pieces exhibited, the Reading Room may be closed during First Friday and special events at the gallery, so please check before traveling. Following the many thematic exhibits (“Dessine moi un livre”, “Lignes multiples”, “Urbanscape”...) and several devoted to the work of specific artists (Richard Long, Hamish Fulton, Christopher Wool...) and editors (JRP/ Ringier, Michèle Didier, Nieves, Salon Verlag...), Christophe Daviet-Thery have asked to Christoph Schifferli to curate an exhibition “books on books”, which will deal with the image and representation of books.

This exhibition will explore three different ways in which a book is represented: either as memory/documentation, as image of the book itself as subject for an artist’s book and finally as image or representation of the book as art.

Nathalie Daviet-Thery also has the pleasure of announcing that a new, permanent space at the gallery will be devoted to artists’ books for children where you will find a selection of books by Enzo Mari, Bruno Munari, Komagata, Andrea Branzi, Robert Filiou, David Shrigley, Remy Charlip and more…

INKUBATOR 2
The DLI Museum and Durham Art Gallery
Until 18th October 2009

An exhibition of Artists’ Books, Prints and Multiples, curated by David Faithfull

Inkubator is a critically acclaimed travelling exhibition that was premiered at Edinburgh Printmakers in 2007 and conceived by artist and printmaker David Faithfull. Through highlighting the work created by a variety of contemporary national and international artists, it aims to broaden exposure and accessibility to the interconnected genres of Artists’ Books, Prints and Multiples, while satisfying one of the fundamental challenges associated with the ‘printed’ artefact.

What particular gallery environment or space can best represent the intentions of the artist and disseminate the particular conceptual and emotive qualities of their artwork? With some of the key elements of these ‘editioned’ art-objects being accessibility and tactility, how can the artist/maker justify the normal curatorial practice of encapsulating these pieces behind glass, in a display case or at best handled with sterile white gloves under the watching eye of an invigilator?

The concept behind Inkubator originally, was to classify the 200 selected works according to three distinct but inter-related themes – The Study, The Log Cabin and The Landscape, presented on open display and available to be handled by visitors. This allowed a refreshingly direct, hands-on experience and thereby maintained the intentions of the artists in adopting these non-hierarchical visual formats of the Artist’s Book, Print and Multiple in the first place.

For its next phase at the Durham Art Gallery, Inkubator evolves an additional themed space - the Bunker - incorporating artists with a particular connection to the North East of England.

Reflecting the proximity of the Gallery to the Durham Light Infantry Museum, this new room resonates with ideas of conflict, but not only in a military sense. Whilst presenting artists dealing with Iraq, the Cold War and Kosova, it also pays homage to Paula Virilio’s Bunker Archaeology, with the bunker as a metaphorical crypt or ark, also encapsulating a sense of the Nuclear Armageddon so evident in the apocalyptic landscapes of Chernobyl.

Inkubator was widely reviewed and described by one commentator as “the best means of looking at this most underrated and misunderstood art-forms [Artists’ Books] I have ever seen.” (Iain Gale, Scotland on Sunday, 22.4.07)

KURS: THE SQUARE
Museum of Contemporary Art, Roskilde, Denmark
Until 20th December 2009

This exhibition points to the square as a resonant space which cannot be finally described or defined. The 10 artists are in different ways preoccupied with the public and personal narratives that attach themselves to the square. They draw lines through the prehistoric layers and add new layers of utopia, community and memory.

Participating artists: Anders Bojen & Kristoffer Orum, Benandsebastian Jepsen, Just Lise Harlev, Matthew Buckingham, Nanna Debois Buhl, Peter Holst Henckel, Rune Sochting. The artists each establish a dialogue with the square, they create alternative ways of navigating through time and space and let new histories unfold themselves on the cobbles. The works map the square not like a topographic chart but as a mental and social space which can be conquered and retold.

For the exhibition, Anders Bojen and Kristoffer Orum let a generative text machine, placed in Stødenttorvet, rewrite the past 1000 years of unofficial history.

Late letterpress: the work of Desmond Jeffery
St Bride Library, London
Monday 26th October – Friday 13th November 2009

As a direct and elegant means of putting words on paper, letterpress remained vigorous until the end of its useful life about forty years ago. In 1950 the power of this unmediated route from original text to printed sheet caught the imagination of a young returning serviceman, Desmond Jeffery. He saw in the work of Anthony Froshaug what could be done with hand-set letterpress. Unlike Froshaug, for whom it was a matrix upon which to develop a design programme, for Desmond the practice was the programme. He equipped himself with an Adana, an Albion and a collection of foundry types, most of them imported, then in 1956 took over a jobbing letterpress workshop in Marylebone, where he installed a Heidelberg platen. Customers ranged from the Stevens Shanks foundry to Mayfair galleries, the Goldsmiths’ Company to the Partisan coffee house.

This is the first public exhibition of his work. In the Exhibition Room, St Bride Foundation. Admission free

In a talk on Tuesday 27th October 2009 at 7pm, James Mosley and Professor Ian McLaren will contribute two personal views of Desmond and his work, to be followed by discussion with other speakers. “Assembly” represents the ultimate in democratic art and was an outgrowth of the Fluxus movement of the 1960s and 70s. Groups of artists - often those active in the correspondence art community - collaborated to produce compilations of work void of editorial oversight. This exhibition celebrates those independent voices through an historical overview of past publications and contemporary examples. Work on display will be from a variety of public and private collections. Co-curated by 2007 Winter Book co-editor Tom Cassidy and MCBA Artistic Director Jeff Rathermel. A series of Assembilings will be produced by MCBA allowing visitors to see the process in action.

Learn to Read Art: A History of Printed Matter
Museo de Arte Contemporáneo de Castilla y León
Until 10th January 2010
Printed Matter is pleased to announce Learn to Read Art: A History of Printed Matter curated by AA Bronson, presenting a comprehensive overview of the organisation, and focusing on the philosophy established by its founders in 1976. Printed Matter was intended as an experiment in art as democratic form: from the modest books published in the late 70s to the most recently produced Artist and Activists pamphlet by The Center for Tactical Magic, the publications demonstrate an interest in a broad distribution, and an openness to critical content.

The sequence of galleries follows the organisation from storefront to storefront over more than three decades, featuring installations by Lawrence Weiner, Josh Smith, Jenny Holzer and Scott Hug. The number of artists who have helped support Printed Matter is astonishing: editions by John Baldessari, Barbara Bloom, Larry Clark, Liam Gillich, Jenny Holzer, Terence Koh, Barbara Kruger, Christian Marclay, Jack Pierson, Richard Prince, Ed Ruscha, Felix Gonzales Torres, Christopher Wool and many more animate the rich history. An architecture of book-shaped platforms by Gareth Long contains the project and provides seating, display, and storage for the project.

Printed Matter is the focus of an exhibition as part of MUSAC’s “Showcase Project.” The installation features a large selection of Printed Matter publications available to be read by visitors to the Museum, and highlights from thirty-three years of editions. MUSAC is distributing free to be read by visitors to the Museum, and highlights from thirty-three years of editions. MUSAC is distributing free of charge a new zine by Ari Marcopoulos titled Catchin’ Bodies, as well as a new pin by Lawrence Weiner titled Aprender A Leer Arte, both published especially for this occasion.

Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art, Keiller Library, Dean Gallery
3rd October 2009 to 3rd January 2010
This Keiller Library display is part of a programme of events, organised in collaboration with the Scottish Poetry Library, which will take place in venues across Edinburgh from October 2009 to January 2010.

Concrete Poetry emerged as an international movement during the 1950s and 1960s in Germany and Brazil, with artists and writers in Scotland also playing an important role. The Scottish artist Ian Hamilton Finlay described the concrete poem as ‘a model, of order, even if set in a space which is full of doubt’.

Other events will be running city-wide, October to December, at venues including the Scottish Poetry Library, National Library of Scotland, Edinburgh Central Library, Edinburgh College of Art, the Fruitmarket Gallery shop, and Old St. Peter’s Episcopal Church.

Talks & Lectures

Horizons of Holland: The Poetic Prelude to Ian Hamilton Finlay’s Gardens
Monday 12th October 2009, 12.45 - 1.30pm
Hawthornden Lecture Theatre - Weston Link (National Gallery Complex) No booking required: free, unticketed

In the summer of 1965, Ian and Sue Finlay left Edinburgh for a stay of one year at a farmhouse in Easter Ross. This period saw the creation of his first three-dimensional constructions based on concrete poems, and their installation in both house and garden. Although the works survive only in photographs, they should be seen as the crucial transition between Finlay’s concrete poetry, and the future garden installations at Stonypath/Little Sparta. A talk by Stephen Bann, Emeritus Professor of History of Art and a Senior Research Fellow at the University of Bristol.

A Model of Order: Concrete Poetry
Monday 23rd November 2009, 12.45 - 1.15pm

No booking required: free, unticketed.

Ian Hamilton Finlay described the concrete poem as ‘a model, of order, even if set in a space which is full of doubt’. Kerry Watson, Librarian - Gallery of Modern Art, looks at how concrete poetry distinguishes itself from the broader tradition of visual poetry and the use of text in art.

[ 73 ] THE BLACK PAGE
Shandy Hall Gallery, Coxwold, York
Until 31st October, 2009
An exhibition at Shandy Hall to celebrate the 250th anniversary of Vols I & II of Tristram Shandy by Laurence Sterne. Page 73 of Volume I is a Black Page to mark the death of Parson Yorick. 73 artists/writers were asked to create a ‘black page’ for this exhibition and auction.

All monies raised will contribute to the matched funding granted by English Heritage to repair the roof at Shandy Hall.

In September 1759, Laurence Sterne would have been making final preparations for the printing of the Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, Gentleman.

Four months earlier he had sent his manuscript, with the hope of publication, to Robert Dodsley, Bookseller and Publisher at Tully’s Head, Pall Mall, but the printer had turned down the opportunity to publish. Sterne, seizing on another tactic, wrote again to Dodsley to:

‘propose therefore to print a lean Edition in 2 small Vols, of the Sise of Rasselas, & on the same paper and Type,- at my own Expence merely to feel the Pulse of the World--& that I may know what Price to set upon the Remaining Volumes, from the reception of these--If my Book sells & has the run our Critics expect, I purpose to free myself of all future troubles of this kind, & bargain with You, if possible for the rest as they come out which will be every six Months.- If my Book fails of Success, the Loss falls where it ought to do ...

...The Book shall be printed here, & the Impression sent up to You; for as I live at York & shall correct every Proof myself, it shall go perfect into the World--& be printed in  so creditable a way as to Paper Type &c-- as to do no Dishonour to You, who I know never chuse to print a Book meanly.

Will you patronise my Book upon these Terms--& be as kind a friend to it as if you had bought the Copy? -

Dodsley agreed and the first two volumes of Tristram Shandy were printed and published in York under Sterne’s supervision - indeed he oversaw the printing of every volume of Tristram Shandy during his lifetime. So it can be stated with authority that the page that appears as [73] in Tristram Shandy Volume 1, the Black Page, the page that informs the reader of the death of Parson Yorick, went ‘perfect into the World’.

In subsequent editions this dramatic visual statement was corrupted and ‘interpreted’ by publishers seemingly unable to cope with the anarchy of a page that contains not text but is simply completely covered in ink.

Occasionally the publisher entirely ignores the existence of the Black Page and nothing appears apart from the marker - Alas! poor Yorick. In other instances the page has mutated into a chess-board pattern, or the size has been reduced to a tiny black square. But even when Sterne’s original template is respected, the variety of BLACKness is extraordinary.

All Black Pages are for sale and visible on http://www.blackpage73.blogspot.com

If books grew on trees
An exhibition of Book Arts from The Book Tree Press at Wigtown Book Festival, in Scotland’s National Book Town
Until 4th October 2009

This is the first exhibition from illustrator Lucy Roscoe working under the imprint The Book Tree Press. Through a collection of artist’s books inspired by literary works, this exhibition looks at the beauty of a book when it is treated as a language rather than simply a vessel.
Lucy graduated in Illustration from Edinburgh College of Art in 2008 and continues to explore print, cut outs and embossed textures in her Masters research.

Walking the Block by Jane Weir has been shortlisted in the Literature category of the British Book Design and Production Awards 2009 (wwwbritishbookawards.org)

The book is experimental in literary terms because very little of their lives is recorded through letters or other documents and Jane Weir has focused on the extensive and meticulously collected sample books and archive collections of their textiles as the major primary source in preparing and writing the biography. The sample books were assembled by Phyllis Barron in collaboration with the educationist Roger Tanner and his wife Heather, and they tell the story of their creative lives and are held at the Crafts Study Centre at the University for the Creative Arts at Farnham, Surrey. There is also an extensive archive of their hand printed textiles held at the Whitworth Art gallery in Manchester, which Jane Weir collaborated with.

Barron and Larcher, trained painters, met after the first war at the Brook Street Gallery, London and spent most of their working lives together in Painswick, Gloucestershire, converting the outbuildings of Hambutts House into a studio for the production of their textiles. They worked with a team of local women and apprentices printing lengths of cloth and maintained indigo and other dying vats alongside the large printing tables in an extensive and self contained arts and crafts enterprise.

Jane Weir worked for three years on the book in a unique collaboration with the archives of Phyllis Barron and Dorothy Larcher held at the Crafts Study Centre at the University for the Creative Arts in Farnham and the large collection of their cloth held at the Whitworth Art Gallery, Manchester. The book is designed and written by Jane Weir and printed with vegetable inks on paper manufactured from sustainable forests.

Two other books are shortlisted in the Literature Category: Weeds and Wildflowers by Alice Oswald (Faber) and The Girl with Glass Feet by Ali Shaw (Atlantic).

The book is published by Templar Poetry and can be purchased for £16.99. templarpoetry.co.uk

PAPER+WATER+PIGMENT, Milan
24th-25th October 2009 with Silvia Molinari
Objects: form and substance
Paper, water, colour. Nothing more. We can carry them with us everywhere at all times and we can stop wherever pleases us to observe and to paint. Watercolour does not need any special ritual; its preparation consists in being ready to capture, to remember: the eye selecting an image, a moment, a subject. An object. Starting by the introduction of some elementary concepts of pictorial construction - so important to obtain a good picture - we will reproduce, by the use of watercolour techniques, the texture of different objects: wood, glass, metal, rusty traces, the veining of larch. 156 EUR, and includes the watercolour paper. The participants have to bring their own brushes and watercolours. Membership to the Association is requested (25 EUR). More information at:

LONG STITCH BINDING
Arezzo, 12th-13th December, 2009 with Cristina Balbiani d’Aramengo Organised by Centro Internazionale Arti Calligrafiche
The Long-stitch is one of the oldest methods of sewing book sections to a cover. It can be an easy way to make interesting books and notebooks with flexible covers made of handmade paper, fabrics, vellum or leather. With Long-stitch sewing the sections are held evenly and the volume opens completely and with ease. No adhesive is needed. During this workshop we will analyse traditional and modern Long-stitch techniques and we will learn how to make different structures. Such structural variations will help to create a variety of ornamental patterns on the spine, as the sewing thread is always visible when sewn Long-stitch. The covering materials will include handmade paper and fabrics and we will learn how to line cloth with Japanese paper and paste. More information at:

CROSSED STRUCTURE BINDING (English)
Stockholm, Sweden 10th-16th April, 2010 with Cristina Balbiano d’Aramengo and Cor Aerssens

This workshop, based on Carmencho Arregui’s Crossed Structure Binding, will develop your capacity to deal with an unusual way of thinking in a perfectly balanced asymmetry and your everyday practice will benefit of this extra understanding of books’ motion. The course is organised in two parts. During the first one, we will deal with 8 different variations of the Crossed Structure Binding, making 8 sample books with blank pages and covers in handmade paper. Then one day of pause is planned, to rest and think about the matter. So in the second part each participant will realise some binding on real books with the cover in leather or vellum. The aim of the workshop is to learn the techniques but also to get able to discern which structure can better fit depending on which book has to be bound.

The registration fee is 775 EUR, including costs of materials provided with tools by the organisers, and lunch and coffee break. The group will be restricted to 14 places only. We cannot guarantee places requested at the last moment. More information at:

Voss, Jan
Square One
The rhyming description of a(n imaginary) speedy journey: one line of a long poem in English on each page, soft cover, 228 not numbered pages, 14.5 x 10.5 cm. Edition of 160, Amsterdam 2008, EUR 15

On each of its 246 pages one line of the rhyming text reporting a zigzag journey around the globe and through outer space. Forty footnotes (each with a picture) amend the text. An observant reader may recognise the footnotes as the text, now translated into English, J.V. wrote for last year’s catalogue of his small retrospective exhibition “40 Jahre, 40 Arbeiten” (40 years, 40 works) held at Galerie Marlene Frei.

A hard cover version of the book, produced and published by Boekie Woekie, is laser printed in a signed edition of 30 copies (plus 5 artist proofs). Its size is approximately A4, but each folded dust jacket is a different original signed paint work and measures unfolded 98 x 74 cm. The book includes a DVD filmed and processed by Iwan Schumacher which documents that retrospective exhibition and renders the reading by J.V. of the earlier version of Square One. EUR 420

Monika is an arts journal without bylines.

Contributors are offered a disguise that enables them to experiment with new material or style, to bypass expectation and play. In turn, Monika’s readers are invited to decode identities, unravel mysteries and embrace the unfamiliar. Published biannually, Monika’s content includes short fiction, essays, visual narratives and artists’ projects as well as the odd curiosity.

Monika isn’t about eliminating identities, it’s about creating a delay in the reader’s discovery of them. By familiarising themselves with patterns and styles within the magazine, through word of mouth, and through piecing together clues, readers can discover the contributor’s identities for themselves; we hope that over time this will inspire an intimate relationship between each reader and the publication. Our aim is to encourage the audience to appreciate the content in a way that frees them from the preconceptions or preferences that named authors can inspire and to generate some intrigue within a culture that rests heavily on the lording of names.

Part of what intrigues us about the idea of anonymity is how very fragile and difficult it is to maintain, how we live in a society that is at once sprawling and faceless - the metropolis, the internet - and identity-obsessed - ID, CCTV, celebrity.

Contributors are offered the opportunity to play with anonymity by perhaps being more candid or experimental than they might be otherwise, but overall, our contributors have confidence in and commitment to their work: Monika is just a platform for which they develop and present ideas. The non-disclosure of names means that the content must hold its own, without being supported or justified by a known contributor’s back catalogue - a challenge both for the editors and for every participant. Equally, the feedback that contributors receive for their input is unbiased and the lack of self-publicity means the content is work for works sake, so it does require guts to participate in Monika.

Monika believes that works should be judged on merit rather than name, and that celebrity culture within the arts (and elsewhere) sometimes misses the point: that quite often we fail to acknowledge the extent that collaboration has to play in the creation of works, and that people’s motivation to write or make images isn’t often to become the ‘next big thing’, but the desire to record and make sense of the world. But playfulness also comes into it. I guess a fair bit of what Monika is about comes from a desire to tease.

Anonymity in the arts isn’t anything new, but it’s due a return.

Portugal Through My Eyes - Mel Sewell

I lived and worked in Portugal for 12 years. I was enticed there by the marvellous year-round light, which even in winter bewitched me into studying the beautiful countryside, intriguing villages, spectacular cities and the fascinating folk in all of these locations. It is a country that I will always return to and will probably never see everything. Lisbon and Porto offer a fascinating depth of culture, architecture and activities.

Portugal Through My Eyes

Black and white will always be my preferred medium as it requires that very large step into the abstract, demanding a focus on subject, composition and tonal values, rather than the distracting realism of colour.

I decided to publish via Blurb - the idea that printing on demand was available and that I could create the whole book using Blurb’s software, upload to them and receive the fully printed and bound copy within 10 days seemed highly attractive. The book itself (160) pages took me six months to put together and all the text is in English and Portuguese, which took even longer to translate and check than I imagined.

A short bio can be seen at www.melsbwportfolio.blogspot.com and a very long one at www.somethingaboutmel.blogspot.com

160 pages with 74 black and white plates of Portugal has been printed with the best quality paper and is a hard cover. The edition is limited to 500 copies. The images were taken during a period of 12 years and are divided between digital and film. The book is available for purchase on-line at www.blurb.com/bookstore/detail/725665 convey a more emotional than geographical terrain; events and places are recorded and revisited, worried over and examined. Silk tissue apertures punctuate the pages offering the reader glimpses of previous and subsequent images. This sequential aspect of the book literally and metaphorically has the reader both seeing the past through the present and looking forward through history’s gauze.

Designed, written and printed by Macy Chadwick, The Topography of Home was letterpress printed with pressure prints and polymer plates on Mohawk Superfine and blue Butcher paper. Window images were hand-stencilled on silk tissue. Storage book binding. 10.5 x 14 inches, open. Limited edition of 50. $700 each.

The Lascaux Variations
Robert Vas Dias, John Wright, Julia Farrer, Neil Crawford

The Lascaux Variations: Fractals of Being represents the combined effort by four people working in different disciplines – poetry, painting, text integration and design, and typography – to find a book format that reflects and recapitulates the concerns of a four-part poem, which explores questions about art and artifice, imagination and reality, line and space, the abstract and the non-objective, the enduring and transitional. The book is frankly experimental in concept and execution, harking back to the little collaborative books by the Russian Futurists of the early 19th century in which text and image were closely correlated, sometimes with text appearing as integral elements of the image itself, as happens in this book.

Both poet and artist were inspired by separate visits to the paleolithic friezes of the Lascaux caves. Starting with early notes and drafts of the poem and with preliminary sketches by the artist, John Wright, the project unfolded over a year, culminating in the finished poem and sixteen pastel-and charcoal semi-abstract drawings by Wright. Painter-printmaker, Julia Farrer then integrated words, phrases and sentences from the poem into scans of the images, which were then subjected to final typographical realisation by Neil Crawford, a professional typographer. After the total design was approved by both artists and the writer, the pages were printed by colour lithography and assembled loose-leaf in a pocket portfolio.

This is the poem’s first appearance in book form after initial publication in The Warwick Review in the spring of 2009.

An Artist’s Portrait of HO CHI MINH

This book contains 116 pages (58 text pages and 58 image pages) and is printed in a limited edition of one hundred with ten artist’s proofs. Each book is numbered and signed by C. David Thomas and Charles Fenn. The books are printed on Vietnamese Do (mulberry) paper hand made in Dong O Village in northern Vietnam. The text pages have beenvarnished. The images are printed from a Hewlett Packard DeskJet 970Cse. The text is printed by letterpress in Monotype Bembo by Wolfe Editions in Portland, Maine.

Each book is presented in a handmade lacquer box made by craftsmakers in the Hanoi area. The lacquer box is contained in a handmade silk slip cover also custom made in Vietnam. This book includes passages from a fictional “diary.” As far as we know, Ho never kept a prose diary. The purpose intended in this work of imaginative reconstruction is to evoke a sense of his personal engagement with the events of his time. The “diary” is based on historical documents but should not be taken literally. Although fictional, the “diary” is based on factual information found at the bottom of each page. Also included are passages from Prison Diary, a collection of poems written by Ho Chi Minh while he was in prison in China in 1942-43, as well as two stories told by Mr. Vu Ky and Mr. Dinh Duong Dinh, two of Ho’s closest associates, and poems by several of Vietnam’s leading poets.

An Artist’s Portrait of HO CHI MINH is $3,000 USD. There are only a few copies still available. A trade version is also available at $40.00 USD plus shipping of $5.00 in the U.S. and $15.00 to the UK. More information is at: www.hochiminh.org / www.iapone.org

REPORTS AND REVIEWS

Review – The Power of the Book
Greenfield Arts Centre
Newton Aycliffe, County Durham

P.T.O. FOR MORE BOOK ARTS NEWS...
2009 marks the bicentenary of the birth of Charles Darwin and 150 years since the publication of his groundbreaking theory on evolution, in his book ‘On the Origin of Species’. Theresa Easton and Kay Henderson used the gallery space at Greenfield Arts Centre in County Durham, as a framework to explore some of the key questions Darwin asked using the form of the Artist’s Book.

The form of the Artist’s Book is thrown into question with a reconfiguration of Darwin’s experiments with marked out plots of land. Easton creates a tension between form and concept emulating ‘the blue print of life’ in the piece Terra Firma. Consisting of silk-screened hard board and glass, the artist connects the technique of making blue prints (cyanotypes) with the association and contemporary reference to DNA. Terra Firma (below) makes a direct link with Darwin’s close and scientific observation. Kay Henderson presents the viewer with a cleverly sculpted and manipulated metal book (aluminium) referencing the ‘weighty’ and complex nature of contemporary arguments in the human genome project.

A selection of Artist’s Books using traditional materials (such as paper & print) and recycled books, fill the gallery space, allowing the viewer the opportunity to handle the work and explore the actual construction.

Finally, Easton presents visitors with the Victorian ‘Cabinet of Curiosities’, which can be read ‘like a book’. The glass cabinet has been delicately screen printed with tracts from Darwin’s notebooks and observations. The content of the cabinet ranges from etchings of Stag Beetles, an original nautilus shell and spider skins to name but a few curious objects. Like Darwin’s notebooks, the cabinet presents a record of observations. Unlike Darwin’s notebook’s the viewer is expected to make connections between object and idea.

Accompanying the exhibition were a series of workshops led by both artist’s, engaging a wide range of individuals, groups and school children, using printmaking and artists’ books to explore Darwin’s key questions.

From 6-29 August VVVgallery presented the 1st edition of Con Guantes Blancos / With White Gloves, an exhibition curated by Carolina Podestá, of artists’ books using photography or lens-based media. The exhibition was held in conjunction with the already well-established Buenos Aires Photo Book Fair which has taken place in Espacio Ecléctico, on the opposite side of the city, since 2002.

As part of the 8th Buenos Aires Photo Book Fair in VVVgallery & Espacio Ecléctico
Buenos Aires, Argentina, August 2009

Artists from Europe and the Americas combined photography with other languages and systems of communications to use the book as a platform for their work. Andrea Nacach, Federico Mereca, Hugo Averta, Ignacio Iasparrá, Luciana Betesh, Marcelo Brodsky, Ralph Veroni, Rosana Simonassi, Santiago Porter and Victoria Simón each presented their book alongside a work in a more ‘traditional’ format. The exhibition was an opportunity for artists, art collectors, bibliophiles, curators and lovers of art and photography to approach a group of special works which deserved to be looked at and touched with special care, ‘with white gloves’.

Congratulations to Veronika Schäpers of Tokyo, Japan. Recipient of the 2009 MCBA Prize!

The MCBA Prize is the first honour in the United States to recognise book art from across the field and around the world. The MCBA Prize celebrates the diversity of book art and encourages discussion rather than limiting recognition to one aspect of this vital field. A jury of three distinguished leaders in the field of book arts reviewed over 110 submissions from 10 nations around the world.

The jurors were: artist, designer and educator Scott McCarney; artist and Arizona State University professor John Risseeuw; and Wellesley College special collections librarian Ruth Rogers. The jury narrowed the field to five finalists; from these five works the jury selected the recipient of the MCBA Prize.

Durs Grünbein: 26°57,3’N, 142°16,8’E

Three poems by Durs Grünbein, translation into Japanese by Yuji Nawata. Letterpress-print in German and Japanese by polymer clichés and vinyl mats in blue, grey and black. Printed on 50 year-old Toshaban-Genshi paper. Illustrated with nautical charts and scientific data on the Architeuthis, provided by Tsunemi Kubodera from the National Museum of Science, Tokyo. Flexible cover made of clear vellum, embossed in black. Box made of acrylic. 46 pages. Dimensions: closed 24 x 45.3 cm; open 47 x 45.3 cm. Edition of 36 Arabic numbered copies and 8 Roman numbered copies.

Artist’s Statement: 26°57,3’N, 142°16,8’E - at this location in the northwestern pacific, the Japanese marine biologist Tsunemi Kubodera took for the first time pictures of a living giant squid in its natural environment. I chose this coordinates as the title for this book containing three poems by the Berlin-based author Durs Grünbein. Despite being located 900 km south of Tokyo, the Ogasawara islands belong to the administrative district of the capital. Until these first images were taken, all scientific surveys were based on dead squids washed ashore, or parts of them found in the stomach of sperm whales. Their giant size evoked the myth of an aggressive monster. When Kubodera published the pictures he took in September 2004 in the Proceedings of the Royal Society one year later, this not only created a scientific sensation, he got worldwide media attention as well.

Inspired by a note in the newspaper, Durs Grünbein wrote a poem titled “Architeuthis” about this discovery. Fascinated by his seven-verse text, this project about deep-sea fish emerged. We chose two additional poems to be printed: one which had already been published about the bizarre shapes and behaviors of creatures living in such depth entitled “Sous les Mers,” reminding of Jules Verne’s Capttain Nemo; and a second about the legendary fish “Remora,” which Grünbein wrote specially for this book.

In Autumn 2006, just shortly before he caught the first giant squid alive, I visited Tsunemi Kubodera in his laboratory in the National Museum of Science in Tokyo. Surrounded by countless preparations and images of different types of squids, he told me about his discovery and the reactions on his publication, not forgetting to point out his disappointment about the Japanese media that concentrated on the questions if this giant squid is edible and how many sushi could be made out of it. I decided to use the data and formulas received from Kubodera together with some nautical charts as illustrations for the book. When we met, Kubodera also showed me pictures and short films of squids he recorded in depths between 600 and 1,000 meters. On these images, the unpracticed spectator only sees dimly silhouettes of the squids but at the same time starts to sense the diversity of life in such darkness. This gave me the idea to use the interaction of transparent and opaque pages for this book.

In search of an appropriate paper, some difficulties arose: a beautiful sample that I had brought back from a trip to Shikoku some years ago was not available any more, since the papermaker had died and no one succeeded his skills. Finally, I got a bigger amount of old Toshaban-Genshi, a very thin Gampi paper, which was used to make stencils for Mimeographs. This paper was exactly what I was looking for, on the one hand very thin and transparent, on the other hand so firm that once it was printed with a dark colour, it turned to be opaque. It also attracts through a fine and rustling tone.

Each page of the book consists of a double spread paper, fold in the front. These fold pages are printed completely with a transparent medium, a colour ranging between grey, blue, or black as well as transitions of these colours. The pages are cut horizontally, pulled apart a little bit and thus make visible the inserted single sheets. On these sheets, I printed the data Kubodera surveyed, as well as the nautical charts that are often only partially visible. The pages with their stripes remind the reader of horizons and depth contours and at the same time give a glimpse to the normally invisible variety of the deep-sea world as if lighted up with a torch.

The tranquil and coloured pages are interrupted by six double-spread pale pages, printed with the three poems in German on the left and their Japanese translation on the right side. According to the coordinates of the place where Kubodera made his images, all periods are replaced by a degree mark and commas are replaced with a minute mark. Yuji Nawata translated the poems into Japanese for this edition. All inserted single pages and the poems are printed by polymer clichés, the coloured pages are printed by vinyl mats.

The book is stitched with thin straps of vellum to a flexible cover of clear vellum. The first page containing the title and the last page with the imprint are visible through the clear material. By its natural warping and organic character, the vellum sets a harmonic antipole to the technical image of the inner pages. On the front cover, the name of the author is embossed in small letters. To control the natural warping of the vellum, the covers are held together with magnetic strips at the leading edge. The book is kept in a compact box made of 8 mm acrylic glass in the style of a preparation. By this it seems to be cast in and the heavy box forms a beautiful contrast to the lightweight and fragile book.
